

Have you been asked to do something at work that could hurt you or a co-worker?

Here's what to do ▶

You have the right to say NO to unsafe work* – without getting into trouble or being punished.

- ▶ Talk to other workers. Tell them why you're worried and want to use your right to refuse. (Many voices are better than one.)
- ▶ Tell your supervisor or employer. Explain the hazard. Say you want to use your right to refuse to do a task because you believe it's dangerous to you or other workers.

* This includes danger from equipment, tools, workplace conditions or violence.

- ▶ The employer must investigate. They must do it with you and someone who represents workers for health and safety issues*.
- ▶ The employer can fix the hazard. Or they may disagree with you, and say there's no danger.
- ▶ If you are pretty sure – have reasonable grounds to believe – it's still dangerous, you can again use your right to refuse.

* That person is a worker health and safety representative, joint health and safety committee member or someone that workers choose.

- ▶ If you do, the employer or you must call the Ministry of Labour, Training and Skills Development: Toll-free: 1-877-202-0008 Press 1 for Work Refusals. When you reach an agent, ask to speak to someone in your language.
- ▶ Someone else can be asked to do the job if they are told why you refused. This must be done with a worker health and safety representative or someone workers choose to deal with health and safety issues.
- ▶ After investigating, the inspector must make their decision in writing without delay. They must give a copy to you, your employer and whomever represented workers during the investigation. Hang onto your copy.

continued...

- ▶ If the inspector agrees with you, the employer must fix the hazard, usually with a deadline. If not, you must return to work.
- ▶ If you disagree, you can appeal. Get help from a legal aid clinic (1-800-668-8258, and ask to speak to someone in your language).
- ▶ Employers must not punish you in any way for refusing. If they do, call us or legal aid.

Stay in a safe place during working hours until the inspector makes their decision; you could do another job. You must be paid for your time, at your usual rate.

For more information about refusing dangerous work:

Local Legal Aid Clinic

Find the nearest one:

1-800-668-8258

Ask to speak to someone in your language

www.legalaid.on.ca/legal-clinics/

Community Groups can help too:

Occupational Health Clinics for Ontario Workers (OHCOW)

Text, WhatsApp or Call:

1-289-684-2821

Follow us on Facebook
ohcow ag-program

eMail: mfw@ohcow.on.ca

www.ohcow.on.ca